The Debt We Owe

Among the debts we owe, not including those which we must repay painfully in the prevailing currency, is a debt to our community or home town. There are those who never consider this debt, but it is a real debt, and some repayment is due.

The key to this debt lies in the first word the "home". It is a wonderful word in the English language, which is never fully defined or adequately translated in foreign tongues.

And when we say "home," we are referring to a house, a husband and wife, who become a father and mother usually, with all the happiness, love, hope and faith that surrounds a home. The home is protected, sheltered and made efficient by modern-day wonders.

Let us look a minute at our culture and civilization and see what we have received in our home town, at birth. There was a time when we had to roam the woods like beasts, without family or home, without a church to allay primitive superstition, without a government to keep order, and without organized society to broaden our social contacts, and without profitable trade — which makes warfare unprofitable.

None of us did much to arrange this wonderful inheritance of the family, the church, organization of the state, society, economics, etc. We came into a world with many modern conveniences, benefitting from the lessons and experiences of the past, and enjoying all the progress which our home town, the state, the nation and the world has made.

This is the debt we owe. It is the obligation of each of us to contribute what he can to the continuing progress of the human race, even if in a small way, so that we repay this large debt we owe in our own individual way.

LOOSE SMUT OF BARLEY, WHEAT CONTROLLED BY NEW METHOD

A new anerobic (witout air) method of killing loose smut fungus of barley and wheat has been developed by recent research, announces S. B. Feene, plant pathologist at VPI Agricultural Extension Service.

The treatment consists of soaking the seed for 4 hours in tap water; then draining and storing the seed in an airtight container for 70 hours at 70° F. After the proper length of airtight storage, the grain is dried as rapidly as possible in order to return it to normal moisture percentages of 10 to 18%. During the drying process, grain temperature should not be permitted to rise above 100° F, Feene says.

What actually happens during the course of the treatment is that the wet grain starts to germate, but since available oxygen is used up in the air-tight container, germination of the grain is slowly stopped by the lack of oxygen, Feene explains. This starting of growth and then stopping it by lack of available oxygen kills the loose smut fungus without damaging the grain. If this procedure is followed, the grain will not sprout prematurely and the seed will be of good quality and can be handled with normal seeding ekuipment.

Before the anerobic method, loose smut was controlled by soaking seed in hot water. The high temperature destroyed the fungus, but also frequently damaged the seed.

Detailed information is available from county agricultural agents and/or the VPI Agricultural Extension Service, Blacksburg.
